ROSE GROWING

By BRYAN TAYLOR

1. SELECTION OF SITE—Select a place where there is free circulation of air—not draughts—and away from overhanging trees. Avoid, if possible, planting red roses in full sunlight, they "blue" badly; yellows and pinks will be quite happy in sun.

2. PREPARATION OF BEDS—For sandy soil add good peat soil; if heavy clay, add peat moss to give drainage. Do not bury manure in the beds—roses are surface feeders and should be fed from the top.

3. PLANTING—When your roses arrive, unpack them and "heel in" the whole bundle in a shallow trench—if the ground is frozen, store in a cool, frost-proof place.

When planting time arrives, put all the roses in a bucket of water (to prevent the roots drying out). Then trim any ragged or broken roots and any spindly branches.

Make the holes wide enough to take the roots without crowding. Place the rose so that the budding point (that is where the branches start to spread out) is at, or about half an inch below the soil level. Spread out the roots.

Mix with the soil taken out of the hole a handful of bonemeal and a handful of peat.

Fill in the hole, shaking the bush once or twice to allow the soil to settle. When the hole is filled stamp around the bush to make it firm. The soil should be as hard as a sidewalk when the stamping is completed.

Mix up a handful of bonemeal per bush with as much woodash as you can get and spread a half-inch layer over the whole bed.

4. FEEDING—At the end of February spread a half-inch layer of well rotted manure or well rotted compost over the beds.

Apply the following mixture: equal parts of sulphate of potash, sulphate of ammonia, superphosphate of lime. Apply at the rate of: one tablespoon middle of April, one tablespoon middle of May to each plant.

5. PRUNING—Newly planted roses must be hard pruned the first spring after planting—that is they must be cut back to 4-5 buds or eyes. The only exceptions to this rule are the climbers and they should be cut back about one-third or to sound wood.

The second and subsequent years they require individual attention as follows:

Bush and Tree Roses—The principle of pruning is that the harder you cut, the stronger the resulting growth. Therefore the most useful guide is: about the end of March—

Weak growth is cut back to 4-5 buds or eyes.

Medium growth is cut back to 6-7 buds or eyes.

Strong growth is cut back to 9-10 buds or eyes.

Always cut to an outside bud and leave the center of the bush open.

Polyanthas and Floribundas—Merely thin out and trim the tops back to sound wood in late March.

Climbers—Take out old and dead wood down to the base, in the fall. Cut back any laterals, or side shoots, to 3-4 buds in late March.

Ramblers (wichuraiana)—No pruning except to remove old and dead wood in the fall.

6. ENEMIES OF THE ROSE—Aphis and sap sucking insects: Nicotine sulphate (Black Leaf 40) is still the best aphicide. Spray as soon as aphis appear and spray three times in succession with a 24-hour interval between.

Mildew, Black Spot, Rust, chewing insects: The most useful of the dusts for these is 8 parts dusting sulphur, 1 part Fermate, 1 part lead arsenate. Start dusting early in the season—prevention is better than cure.

Our rose list comprises the best of the newer and the choicest of the older varieties. We have selected them as especially suitable for the Pacific Northwest and have rigorously excluded any varieties that have proved disappointing in this area. All stock is Washington No. 1 grade, two-year field grown.

A BAG TO SMELL UNTO, OR TO CAUSE ONE TO SLEEP

Take drie Rose leaves, keep them close in a glasse which will keep them sweet, then take powder of mints, powder of cloves in a grosse powder. Put the same to the Rose leaves, then put all these together in a bag, and take that to bed with you, and it will cause you to sleepe, and it is good to smell unto at other times.

—Ram's "Little Dodoen"—A.D. 1606.

HONEY OF ROSES

Take four ounces of dried red Rose petals, the white heels cut off before they were dried, three pints of boiling water and five pounds of honey. Pour the boiling water onto the dried Rose petals and leave for six hours. Strain and add the honey. Boil to a thick consistency.

—Nineteenth Century Recipe.
